"Hastily crafted. The subtle details, like the ground being malformed because it was sloppily made in the editor, the swarm of Bowsers that can easily be avoided by jumping above them, the Star placed before them that doesn't actually appear, the somewhat perceived progression of enemies that doesn't work because it's so easy to ignore them really adds up to make a total lazy doodle of a level. In short: This blows. Don't rush things just to be the first."

Cyan:

"This level doesn't really try to accomplish anything. It is quite literally just a bunch of ground and enemies placed without much thought put into it, and the only thing that was remotely interesting about it was trying to cross the pit with a bunch of Bowsers as Wario, that wasn't even difficult either. Please, next time actually try..."

"This level is very, very short and has little to no gameplay, you don't even need to use the character doors. The beta version of the level looked like it was gonna have more content than the final product, please do not rush levels. Also I got softlocked as wario in the first 2 seconds."

"This only feels like a rough idea for a level turned playable. There's some elements that can be toyed with; Making a level focused on strong characters and using Switch Blocks. Except it feels like a very slapdash level because there's no actual consistent theme at play, nor is it challenging or engaging. It's like it was going somewhere but then immediately rushed to the end, which is strange because this is one of the first submissions made for the contest. If you spend more time making and fleshing out a level, I guarantee it'd turn out far better than this. Also, I don't think making a level focused on an enemy that's totally stationary would actually be that good."

Cyan:

"I felt like the level got over before it could even accomplish anything...? What is there is extremely simple in design, and it doesn't really have much interesting aside from the theme that is really only there because of the Sambas placed around. It feels more like a rough start to a level rather than the final thing. Also, I wonder what was even the point of the character doors at the start..."

Long comment: "Is this like, 6 screens wide? Is that why the timer's 1 minute? It's an interesting idea but it isn't really developed in any meaningful way. Next time, try to develop the ideas you present.

There could be some interesting level design to go for score with launching Koopas at Sambas while trying to reach the goal in time, but as it is right now, you don't even have to play as the 3 character doors characters.

Visually uninteresting and doesn't really tie the gameplay to the visuals, specially not the weird way the character doors are placed in."

Short comment:"Under developed, shows some amount of premise, at least."

"I really like this level, although in the first region i did get stuck because the platform and donuts kept disappearing for unknown reasons, but I cant say that's the level creator's fault. (and i did get past it on my first try)

Gameplay was cool and really different from alot of other boll levels ive played, although it did feel a bit repetitive at some parts"

Jump:

"Very lengthy level. It definitely feels Wario Land-like with being slower paced and how vertical it is; The usage of secrets adds to this. The varied use of totally different biomes is pretty unique, I like the implied progression of time. My main gripe with the level is how tight it is. It didn't really get much in the way of traversing the level but it makes everything feel very cramped. I prefer feeling like I have space to move around. If this was only used for a section then it'd feel more deliberate, but it's consistent and makes it seem like something unaccounted for. It doesn't feel like the level has much of a running mechanic to it either, but that's not really an issue."

Cyan:

-Gameplay: 4/5

-Visuals: 4/5

-Creativity: 5/5

"Very interesting! I think it's a bit cramped and there's a lack of checkpoints, there's only one despite there being various sections, replaying it wasn't that bad though. It's designed around Wario pretty well, like in those parts where you gotta see where to start a Mach Dash to break the cracked ground. The bonus areas are cool too, I did struggle a bit on one, but it was the game's jank really, so I'm not judging that. As for visuals, The way this level uses the game's assets is cool, only that some of them are clearly unfinished and could've used a level skin. Overall, it's pretty neat."

- Gameplay: 3/5

-S-:

"Gameplay is low due to the level being really unforgiving and check point placement needing a readjustment.

My main issues derive from Region 2, it punishes you with lava for trying to roll as you're taught to do during the first sublevel's secret,(that is until red ring 4, where rolling WAS taken into account), it also serves as a considerable difficulty spike compared to the first Region that the level doesn't continue or build upon in Region 3. (this is mostly due to lava being insta-kill).

On the other hand, the secret placement in Region 1 and 3 are very nice, the one in Region 2 is a bit weird though, the ideas presented are great, and the idea of being in a cramped space and finally escaping it at the end is pretty nice, though the level ended so soon after i almost didn't realize that was the intention.

All in all, level would benefit greatly from Region 3 and 2 being swapped in order, and the checkpoint being placed sooner."

Short comment:"Beware Wario beginners, this level will lava your bolls."

“Fun level, the level design is very clearly made for Sonic characters but it still accommodates for others. The winter setting having very different level design was a little jarring but still fun; none of the stage has much of a running theme but it’s okay to have basic levels. Haven’t seen any other stage make use of slopes in an actually Sonic-like matter.

Cyan:

-Gameplay: 4/5

-Visuals: 4/5

“At first I didn’t like this level as much, but it got a much needed improvement. There’s no more lag and the removal of rings makes it much better to play, it doesn’t feel like it has that much of a theme but the basic layout is pretty fine. It’s definitely designed around Sonic, though Mario can still beat it, it’s more fun as Sonic due to a sort of interesting use of slope jump physics.”

“Visually, it looks like a draft for a level. Quite unpolished on that front. There’s a small problem with the lack of signposting where to go which would have easily been avoided by adding some coins showing where to go. The level design itself is pretty good; fun to avoid the tons of obstacles your way. The lack of proper ground to stand on is interesting too.”

Cyan:

- Gameplay: 5/5
- Visuals: 3/5
- Creativity: 4/5

“Immediately got hit by an unreadable description but that’s ok. This level looks pretty basic but honestly I found its design pretty fun, vine climbing isn’t really used anywhere in Boll but I like it as the main mechanic to try avoiding obstacles, even if they’re not that hard to do so the idea at least is neat.”

- Gameplay: 3/5
- Visuals: 3/5
- Creativity: 3/5

“The level feels a bit janky. Sometimes I found myself falling off thinking there was a lower path, or that certain pipes weren’t just decorative walls. My biggest gripe is the thwimps, as coming from below them is really awkward if you don’t know where they’re coming from.”

-S-:

- Gameplay: 3/5
- Visuals: 3/5

“It’s a level that doesn’t have much going on, it’s mostly based on whether you can dodge bullets on top of platforms well, it isn’t much, and doesn’t present any ideas outside of that, sadly.”

"A level skin is already more effort than most would do so I'll give credit on that even if the decoration itself is rudimentary. Level design is too cramped at points and Boll isn't good at substituting Sonic design."

Cyan:

-Gameplay: 3/5

-Visuals: 4/5

-Creativity: 3/5

“Outside this level being made with duct tape, the actual design ain’t that bad, and also it’s nice you were one of the few people to actually use level skins. It’s just a fine level, mostly suffering from trying to turn Boll into a Sonic game when it really isn’t.”

- Gameplay: 2/5
- Visuals: 3/5
- Creativity: 3/5

“While a good use of graphics, the execution used makes the game slow to a crawl, so gameplay is definitely suffering from that. Approaching some of the boosters wrong gives you the Sonic Advance 2 Special and sends you straight to a bottomless pit, which kind of sucks. The platforming feels a bit cramped, even though being designed around Sonic.”

-S-:

“This level was pure joy to play. It really has that SMBX DNA in it, shame there aren’t actual CPUs, though the stickmen were funny. It just stood out to me because of the tasks you had to do and such, it was really fun. Going for Red Rings was, too. I loved the endings and all, all this level really needs is more visual polish, but I don't blame you for sticking with what Boll has to offer."

- Gameplay: 4/5

"Extremely short, which was disappointing but also for a fair reason, the level as it is is already really good and creative, and a good example of the things you can come up with by using code blocks. The block section was the highlight imo, because it was just fun puzzle solving. The shooter section was a bit too easy since you could just go to the top. Oops! The ending with the key was really funny too. Nice level, would just want more of it."

- Gameplay: 4/5
- Visuals: 3/5
- Creativity: 5/5

"Quite the gameplay change! I really like the way the level introduces its material, like the gravestone before the fireball section. One nitpick I say I would have is that the camera doesn't accommodate well in some sections, but that doesn't take away much from the experience. Nice ending by the way."

-S-:

- Gameplay: 4/5
- Visuals: 3/5
- Creativity: 5/5

"It's a very inventive level, using codeblocks to create something truly unique in ball. Even though it's 2 gimmicks and nothing else it's still very well made anyway. The puzzles themselves are a bit lacking, and they don't really get too strong or employ the gimmick in a completely interesting way. I'm baffled by there not being an on off block puzzle in the shooter segment.

There are a few wacky design decisions though, mainly: orbinaut's projectiles are really hard to see against the ghost house bg"

Toxic Caves (Demo) [Somari9866]

bro said it's just a level they're working on does that mean it wasn't even made for the contest cuz if so it's dq'd
